The Mite Cycle shown here was built by the author at a total cost of $50. It weighs 85 lbs. and is powered by a Briggs and Stratton engine. All unnecessary frills were forgotten in its construction, and the only tools used were a small lathe, a hack saw and a welding torch. The frame, being the foundation of the project, should be built first. It is made of salvaged aircraft streamline tubing ...

One big problem with the Mechanix Illustrated magazine plans is that most of them in the issues I have (1950 & '51) are spread across two adjoining pages and the magazine binding keeps you from laying the pages flat on a scanner. The mag pages are stapled through from front to back instead of through the center folds, which holds the page margins tightly together. A lot of the plan at the ...
